

Measuring What Matters Project Assistant

Jenalyn Ormita

Jenalyn Ormita is a Psychology Honours student at Mount Royal University with a minor in Women & Gender Studies. Jenalyn aspires to earn her Ph.D. in Psychology and work at a university where she can teach aspiring world leaders and psychologists while researching racial oppression, stereotyping, and discrimination. By doing so, she hopes to help achieve social justice and address the forms of intergenerational trauma that result from systemic inequalities.

These values and aspirations led Jenalyn to volunteer at the Centre for Social Impact Technology and work as the Measuring What Matters Project Assistant at the Institute for Community and Prosperity to exercise her advocacy, gain knowledge and experience on social innovation, and collaborate with forward-thinking Changemakers. Jenalyn has received awards for her leadership and community service, including the Swami Vivekananda Scholarship in 2022 and 2023.
