My Creative Work came out of the Community Showcase. I asked participants a question: How do you center your culture, spirituality, or values in your home? The result was this word cloud, which provided the base for my stop-motion film, titled: Brickolage. In social innovation, bricolage is the idea of creating something new with what you already have. This piece is meant to embody the idea of building a home through intention, care, and belonging.

How do you center your culture, spirituality, or values in your home?

The bricks came from my daughter's toy bin. I wrote one concept from the word cloud onto each brick, to signify the different ways that people feel like they belong at home. I then took a still each time I placed a brick on the base, and the result shows how we can slowly build up something new. The goal with this piece is to consider how each brick in isolation is not impressive - but when combined with all the others, it creates a place of security and safety.
