

Inclusive Post-Secondary Education enables students to:

- » Enrich their learning through practical, business driven curriculum in focused programs of study
 - » Increase their employment opportunities through the development of job skills and contacts
 - » Make a valuable contribution to the workplace
 - » Increase broader choices for career options
- Building strong communities includes recognizing the unique strengths and talents of every citizen. diversity contributes to:

- » A welcoming workplace
- » Increased levels of job satisfaction
- » Employee morale
- » The establishment of simplified training procedures

With the support of inclusive post-secondary education, employers and students develop a working relationship that matches student interests and skills with employer needs.

When Mount Royal first opened its doors in Sept. 1911, it welcomed 179 students. Today, some 12,000 credit students take a variety of programs and courses including bachelor's degrees, applied degrees, university transfer courses, diplomas and certificates.

Experience has taught Mount Royal the importance of preparing students well for life after graduation. That means offering a curriculum with practical and current information, as well as hands-on learning through work placements, practicum opportunities and Co-op education.
